

Patient or Health System First? What Should Be the Focus of Medical Humanitarian Assistance Today?

Friday October 24th and Saturday October 25th 2008
Kaiserin-Friedrich-Haus, Robert-Koch-Platz 7, 10115 Berlin, Germany

Draft version: August 27th 2008 – SOME SPEAKERS TO BE CONFIRMED (tbc)

Friday, October 24th 2008

09:00 - 09:30	Keynote: 30 years Alma Ata, what's next? In 1978, the Alma Ata declaration of "Health for all by the year 2000" was based on the credo that health is a fundamental human right. The comprehensive primary health care (PHC) approach was proclaimed to be a model policy for global health. Thirty years later, what are the challenges to global health? What is the role that medical humanitarian assistance should play? Are PHC and medical relief complementary or is the latter a substitute for failing health systems? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • David Sanders, Director of the School of Public Health, University of Western Cape, Cape Town (tbc)
09:30 - 11:00	Whom are we treating? Patients or health systems? Historically, humanitarian assistance was developed to provide emergency relief to people threatened by the consequences of war. Over the last decades though, humanitarian agencies have extended their scope of action to provide assistance in major health crises, often not caused by conflict or disasters. Was humanitarian assistance ever set out to be the driver of global health development? Is today's role of medical humanitarian assistance to deal with the consequences of failing health systems? This session will map out impulses, approaches and policies of actors involved in fighting global health crises, will debate their complementarities and what is successful in meeting the needs of people most at risk. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Katja Roll, Donor Relations, The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, Geneva • Frank Dörner, General Director, Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF), Berlin • Dominique Praplan, International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC), Geneva • David Sanders, Director of the School of Public Health, University of Western Cape, Cape Town (tbc) Moderation: Peter Tinnemann, Coordinator, International Health Sciences Institute, Charité University Hospital Berlin
